THIS IS THE PLACE FOR HOME MAKERS

More than eighty years ago a large party of emigrants moved westward across the States in search of a promised land. After a long and trying pilgrimage they arrived one day at a certain peak set on a spur of the Rocky Mountains, which commanded a marvelous prospect of sunkissed plains and shining streams. On this spot the inspired leader of the party declared with dramatic emphasis and outstretched arms: "This is the place!"

Forthwith one of the most cleverly calculated and carefully planned chapters of city building was initiated. With mathematical precision and with keen definiteness of purpose a townsite was mapped out, and from these beginnings a great Rocky Mountain metropolis was brought into being.

It cannot be argued that the construction of a city always follows the lines of romance and direct intention indicated in the above story. Indeed, it has been said that in our modern America many cities just happen, and are not the fulfillment of some particular scheme or plan. Some cities spring up around large industries which provide livelihood for thousands of workers. Others take shape first in the minds of real estate speculators, while others are constructed in spots which Nature has made unusually attractive. It might be of interest to consider the events and motives which lay behind the growth and development of our own prosperous city.

We live in a young city; a quarter of a century of endeavor and achievement covers the entire history of Daly City. In a certain sense the arrival of the first settlers in this community may be compared with the coming of the pilgrims to their Rocky Mountain Home. The latter made the great trek as a result of religious persecution, while Daly City's first residents had been driven forth to seek new homesites by a stupendous catastrophe. The northern portion of San Mateo county—adjacent of the southern boundaries of San Francisco county—presented many natural advantages which could be reached with a minimum of trouble and only a brief journey. There is no doubt that, apart from the earthquake and fire of 1906, the residential section of San Francisco would have reached out ultimately into this inviting corner of a neighboring county. But Nature hurried things along and ordained that a group of homeseekers who stepped over the line should found a new and independent community, which was destined to expand in the short period of twenty-five years to its present considerable dimensions.

The original settlers in Daly City were not looking particularly for a Promised Land. Their chief purpose was to find a good place to live. The only outlet from San Francisco lay to the south. By twos and threes they had explored the land. They discovered that the water was exceptionally pure and plentiful. They beheld with delight the fair panorama of fertile valley and plain which stretched from the backbone of the Peninsula to the blue Pacific. They viewed the crystal glory of distant Lake Merced, embowered in perpetual green. As they regarded the splendor of this inviting district, they realized—even if they did not give verbal expression to their thoughts—that this was the place.

The record of the city's birth and development furnishes a romantic story. It is not probable during the first early days of their sojourn in this locality that they ever dreamed they were to be the pioneers of a new municipality. At the moment their chief concern was that they had secured a refuge away from the chaos and confusion which had fallen on San Francisco. The example of the first arrivals was followed by many others, and within a short period the little community had assumed a definite character. Suggested by the wonderful natural prospects, the name "Vista Grande" was applied to the new settlement. It was not long before various real estate firms followed the independent pioneers and streets were laid out and building tracts opened. The exodus from San Francisco continued long after the need to take refuge had passed. Before they realized it, the earliest pioneers found themselves with a city on their hands. Within five years from the time the pioneers had begun their work of homebuilding, a petition for incorporation was presented to the San Mateo county board of supervisors, with the request that the new community be known as "Daly City."

The choice of name gave fitting honor to the late John D. Daly, always known as the first pioneer and "Father" of Daly City. Mr. Daly had been the first resident in the neighborhood and was intimately identified with the work and development of the community until his death in 1923. Mr. Daly enjoyed universal respect and affection throughout the community which bears his name. Up to the time of his final illness he was a constant visitor in the city which had grown up around his old home.

(This story of Daly City will be continued next week.)

SEEKS AID FOR BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT

In the last issue of the Record it was announced that the District Council had formed plans for a new troop of Scouts to be installed in this community. The response to the invitation extended to the boys of Daly City has not been very gratifying. Therefore, we are going to appeal to the parents of boys who are 12 years of age or over to interest themselves in the Scout movement.

A good heart to heart talk with your youngster will, no doubt, reveal the advantages in Scouting. Remember, the boy of today is the citizen of tomorrow, and the training received as a Boy Scout will make him fit to carry out his obligations to his country. Further, the Scouts are not a military organization, nor do they advocate the practice of military training. The drills, such as are now used by the public schools throughout the United States, are employed by the Boy Scouts for the purpose of maintaining discipline.

Next Tuesday evening, January 26, a dramatization of the fifteenth annual report, "Washington's Dream at Valley Forge," will feature an anniversary dinner of the San Francisco Area Council, Boy Scouts of America, at the Fairmount Hotel. Fifteen year veterans' service badges will be awarded to members of the Council's executive board, and annual installation of officers will be neld. C. S.

LOCAL V. F. W. POST PLANS RADIO HOUR

Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars, has completed plans for the "Hello America" radio hour, sponsored by the Veterans of Foriegn Wars of the United States, and will be broadcast over a nation-wide network of radio stations served by the National Broadcasting Company.

At 8:30 P. M., Pacific Standard time, this Friday evening, January 22, this Post has arranged to hold an open meeting, to which the public is invited, to listen in on a program of nationally known speakers and entertainers. A radio, which has been donated for the occasion, will be installed in Masonic Hall, Daly City, and it is expected that a large class of recruits will be on hand to receive the impressive obligation of the V. F. W. direct from Commander-in-Chief Donald D. Decoe, over the radio.

Come and bring your friends! Spend an enjoyable get-together evening while listening to brief but vibrant messages relating to the welfare of America and its veterans. Hear Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees broadcasting from New York City. Paul Whiteman and his symphony orchestra wringing out snappy melodies over the air from Chicago; Coon-Sanders and their famous Night Hawks from New York; the U. S. Marine Corps Band, pioneers in radio broadcasting, from Washington, D. C.; Odette Myrtil, well known Parisian musical comedy star, now playing on Broadway, who will, through her interpretations, endeavor to bring you back to those exciting days of 1817-1918; and Mildred Bailey, the noted blues singer with Paul Whiteman's band, who is advertised as the greatest find in the musical world in many years.

Hear Congressman Wright Patman, a disabled war veteran, who is recognized from coast to coast as an authority on veterans' problems, and one who speaks with accuracy and facts on matters pertaining to their relief and welfare. His address on the subject of the immediate cash payment of the adjusted service certificates (Soldier's Bonus), will be one of the highlights of the radio hour.

To all members of the Post, we ask you to "Get Your Man," and have him at the Post room, ready to take the obligation over the radio direct from our Commander-in-Chief, this Friday evening, January 22.

Dancing will follow the radio program.

LADIES' HOME CLUB

Much good work will be accomplished this year by the welfare sewing department. Many little folks of this district will be warmer and more comfortable these cold nights as a result of the work of the good ladies who are sewing all their spare time, making nities for children and women who need them at this time. Mrs. Lohr, the school nurse, will see that the proper distribution through the welfare board is made, and all may rest assured that quite a few folks will be made very happy upon receiving them.

LEGION MEMBERS TO DANCE TONIGHT

The members of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, will hold their regular meeting tonight, Friday, January 22, at Eagles Hall. This meeting will be short and snappy, as the social committee has arranged for one of the now well known Legion dances, to be held tonight.

"Doc" and his haywire orchestra will furnish the music, and there will be refreshments.

One evening last week the Post's haywire orchestra, accompanied by a group of Auxiliary members, made a visit to Letterman hospital, at the Presidio, and entertained the sick and wounded veterans. The music, and the cake and coffee, was enjoyed by all, and best of all, appreciated by those boys for whom the war is not over yet, some of them having been there for a long time. A visit to the hospital is always appreciated by these unfortunate vetrans.

Comrades Crane, Harrison, Mockler and Prizborowski visted San Mateo Post No. 82, last Monday evening, and were treated to a fine talk by Mr. McCurdy, who has just returned from a trip around the world. Major Royse, of the Veterans' Bureau, also addressed the boys, and told them what the government has done and is doing for the welfare of the veterans, such as free hospitalization, pensions, relief, etc.

We wonder what "Doc" did with the 16 cents he acquired at a recent meeting?

LEGION AUXILIARY ENTERTAINS VETS

On Thursday evening of last week several members of Daly City Unit No. 410, Ladies' Auxiliary to the American Legion, again entertained the veterans at the Red Cross Hut in the Presidio. The evening was deligthfully spent in playing cards, after which punch and home made cakes were served.

During the evening the Haywire orchestra of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, entertained with a number of selections, and from all indications were greatly enjoyed.

Rain, hail, snow, thunder and lightning couldn't keep the following from motoring to the Presidio to help entertain our veterans: Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Jordan, Dr. and Mrs. F. P. Callsen, Commander and Mrs. Jack Mockler, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Trier, Mr. and Mrs. David Broom, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Prizborowski, June Craft, Margaret Kenney, Grace Talmadge, Catharina Foreman, Grace L. Augustien, Nell Van Husen, Mrs. M. Craft, Olivia Wendorff and Mr. Brown.

DESPONDENT MAN ENDS LIFE

On Wednesday of last week, at 9:45 P. M., Charles F. Kingam, aged 32, residing with L. W. Robinson, of 3 Garibaldi street, Daly City, shot himself with a revolver on the street in front of the Robinson home. Mr. Robinson, who was looking out of the window, saw Kingam shoot himhelf. The body was removed to the W. C. Lasswell undertaking establishment.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL NOTES OF INTEREST

Mr. Crane, the District Superintendent, arranged a demonstration of the uses of visual education in the schools. This demonstration took place at the General Pershing school and stressed the possibilities of slides made by the children.

Mrs. Hewner, in charge of girls' sports, has announced that the girls have been organized into groups. The different groups are now playing end ball, a game very similar to basketball. In March, the girls will start playing baseball and will compete with other schools for block letters.

Nineteen thirty-two marks the bicentennial year of George Washington's birth, he having been born February 22, 1732. Much is being done throughout the country in honor of our great hero and to remind our people of his service and sterling character which prompted that service. The schools especially will pay honor to his memory during this year.

Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, superintendent of schools for the county, has presented each school room in San Mateo county with a copy of the famous Unfinished Portrait of Washington, by Stuart. These pictures, which are excellent copies, will do credit to any school room and should be an inspiration to every student.

The regular meeting of the Woodrow Wilson-Vista Grande P. T. A. met at Woodrow Wilson school on Tuesday, January 12. The special feature for the day's program was a talk and first aid demonstration by Mr. Madden, first aid director of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. His talk and demonstration were both interesting and helpful. Light refreshments were served after the meeting.

With the exception of the kindergarten, Vista Grande school is now a primary building. This change is very convenient in keeping the smaller children together and working the subjects more closely and efficently.

CROCKER CHAPTER HAS DANCE AT CROCKER MASONIC TEMPLE

On Monday evening, January 18, after a short business meeting, the members of Crocker Chapter No. 382, Order of Eastern Star, and their friends enjoyed a dance at Crocker Masonic Temple, with a splendid orchestra, and an unusually good attendance. The committee in charge deserves a vote of thanks. A card party was in order for the members not dancing, and was also well attended.

Another card party will be held on January 29, at 8:30 P. M. All are cordially invited.

NEW OFFICERS ARE CHOSEN BY BOARD

The San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday approved the nominations by Supervisor Dr. C. V. Thompson of Gus B. Risso and Louis A. Cavalier, of Burlingame, as justice of the peace and constable, respectively, of the new Sixth judicial district, recently created by the board. The new district includes Burlingame and Millbrae.

At the same time the board appropriated $2,500 to pay the salaries of the new officials until July 1, when the new budget will be drawn. Risso, as justice of the peace, will receive a salary of $175 monthly, with an allowance of $60 a month as office rent. Cavalier will receive a salary of $165 a month.

Risso and Cavalier were chosen from a field of some twenty-five candidates for the two posts. Risso was formerly deputy collector of internal revenue out of San Francisco, and Cavalier is former chief of police of Burlingame. The new fficials took office Monday.

The supervisors passed an ordinance, submitted by the county planning commission, controlling the creation of sub-divisions throughout the county. The ordinance was drawn with the assistance of County Surveyor James S. James and Hugh R. Pomeroy, advisor to the commission. It is said to be the last word in subdivision regulation.

The board delayed action on a plan to create a peace officers' retirement fund. The project calls for the contribution of 2 per cent of the officers' monthly salary to the fund, the balance needed to be paid by the county. The provisions call for retirement at not less than $100 or more than $150 monthly after twenty years' service.

Payment of $1,557 for the widening of Broadway, Burlingame, from California drive to Bayshore highway was approved by the board on motion of Dr. Thompson.

Quit claim deeds on several pieces of property acquired for the Colma-South San Francisco sewer project, since abandoned, were asked through City Attorney J. C. Coleberd, South San Francisco. They were given.

The board refused to call a special election on the creation of a new utility district to include Salada and Brighton beaches. The action was taken on advice of the district attorney, who claimed there was already one district at Salada, and this could not be incorporated in a new district, as was proposed by the petitioners.

Building and loan associations of California are in a highly satisfactory condition, considering the general business situation, Former Governor Friend W. Richardson stated recently. "Building and loan association funds are invested in the safest security known to the financial world—loans on American homes," said Richardson. "Because the desire to own homes is the primary ambition of the families using these funds, the vast majority of pyaments due will be made, even if great sacrifice is entailed. Protection of the individual investor's funds will be the main object of my regime. People should not confuse building and loan associations with banks. In order to earn 6 per cent, money entrusted to these organizations must be kept at work. Unless a building-loan's funds are at work the institution is not healthy." Commissioner Richardson said he planned to eliminate some employes in his department whose services were not actually needed.

OUR BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER says that habits always make him think of burrs—they stick and are mighty hard to get rid of. Of course there are some kinds of habits you don't want to get rid of—good habits. Then there are some habits which are neither good nor bad, and it doesn't really matter whether or not you get rid of them. Lastly, there are bad habits, the kind you DO want to get rid of as quickly as possible, and these stick tighter than either of the others. They never shake off; they have to be pulled off or cut off.

Now one of Peter Rabbit's habits is to run in circles, a perfectly harmless habit usually, and yet one which sometimes gets him into trouble. You see hunters know of this habit, and when they have set a dog to chasing Peter they just stand near where they first started Peter, knowing that sooner or later he is almost sure to come back there and give them a chance to shoot at him. Peter has run in circles that way so much that she seldom thinks anything about it. So it was not surprising that as he ran about in the Green Forest this moonlit night, looking for tracks of his neighbors, he should gradually make a circle, and so come upon his own tracks made when he first started out.

At first he didn't know that they were his own, and started to follow them. Then, happening to look back at the footprints he had just made, he suddenly realized that they were exactly like the ones he was following.

"Huh!" he Chuckled. "Here I Am Chasing Myself."

Peter can always see a joke, even if it is on himself. "Huh!" he chuckled." Here I am chasing myself! I am afraid it would be a long, long chase to catch up. I guess I'll run over to the pond of Paddy the Beaver and see what I can find there. Hello!"

Peter sat up very straight and stared straight ahead at the tracks he had made earlier in the evening. His eyes were round with surprise, and then a troubled look crept over them. Somebody had been following him just as he had followed others! There were the tracks plain to see. Who could have made them? Peter hurried for a closer view of them. But this told him nothing. He never had seen any like them before, and so of course he couldn't tell who had made them. Hastily he looked around and saw where the tracks had joined his own. They came from the direction of an old brush pile, and when they reached his own turned and followed his. It was quite clear that whoever had made them had been going in another direction until he came on Peter's tracks. Then he had at once turned to look for Peter. Was it some one who, like himself, was following the tracks of his neighbors just out of idle curiosity, or was it an enemy? With all his heart Peter wished he knew. One thing was very plain to see, and that was that whoever was following him had found his tracks, and Peter didn't like that. It made him uneasy.

What should he do? He didn't dare sit still and he didn't know where to go. If only he knew who it was! Suddenly he thought of a plan. Perhaps if he followed those tracks back before they joined his own he might learn something. Peter wasted no more time. He hurried along that back track straight to the brush pile. The tracks went all around it and in and out under it. Peter didn't like that a bit. He was beginning to get suspicious. Then he found where the tracks had first come to the brush pile from the direction of an old fallen log. He hurried over to this. The tracks were all around and over the log. Whoever had made them had peeped into every hole, no matter how small. Then Peter knew.

"It's Shadow the Weasel!" he cried with a frightened gasp. "No one but Shadow would look into every hole this way and run all around and in and out of the brush pile. It's Shadow the Weasel, and now he's after me! Oh, what shall I do?"

TURNING WHITE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

"HIS hair turned white in just one night."
They say, and sigh with sympathy.
"His hair grew gray in just one day"—
Well, he is better off than me.
One night of trouble changed his hair;
Just look at mine, there's plenty there,
Yes, white and gray they seem to run,
But I got my hairs one by one.

One night of grief and like a leaf
His hair was altered in its shade,
One day of pain, of sorrow's rain,
Yes, so it was the change was made.
One night, and white or gray he grew,
One joyless day, and he was through.
He had a night he couldn't smile,
But my white hair took quite a while.

See this one here? That took a year
Of trouble when the times were bad.
See that one there? I got that hair
With months of worry that I had.
If sympathetic you must be,
Then why not sympathize with me?
Some get them suddenly, but I'm
Still getting mine—one at a time.

But He Does That Well

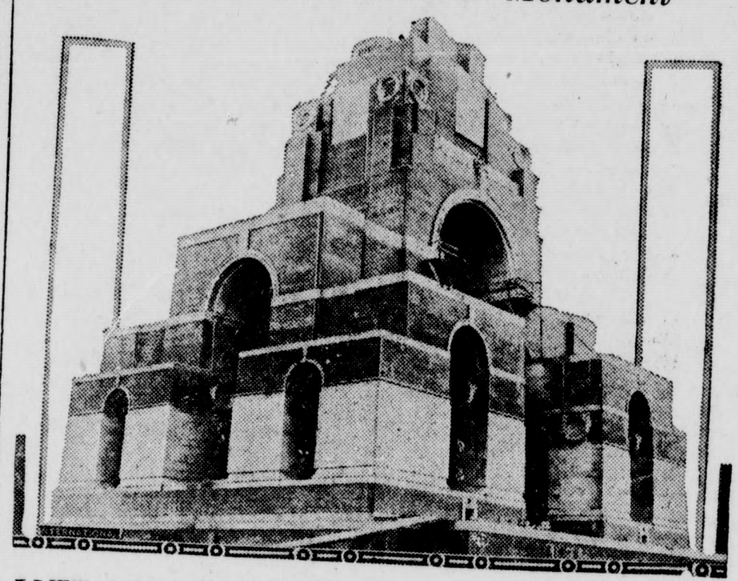

Once in a while you meet a man whose only function apparently is to serve as a mooring mast for a nickel cigar.—Lafayette Journal and Courier.

COLD'S ADVANCE MAN

Dr. H. B. Maris, of the United States naval research laboratory, who will be the scientific director of the Arctic expedition which will sail for the Far North next June. Accompanied by Capt. F. H. Williams of the naval reserve, the party will make its base and erect a radio station at old Fort Conger, a lonely outpost on Ellesmere island. From there, 600 miles from the North pole, daily reports as to the Arctic weather drifting down to the temperate zones will be radioed to the weather bureau. This advance information will enable the United States to prepare its weather reports far in advance.

Mother's Cook Book

EVENING SANDWICHES

WHAT can be more appealing to the appetite on a cool night than hot, appetizing sandwiches. They may be made as dainty as an afternoon tea sandwich or as substantial as a main dish.

Hot Egg Sandwich.

Cook six eggs in the shell until hard, remove the shells and chop fine. Add pepper and salt and a teaspoonful each of chopped parsley and capers, a tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of cornstarch mixed in four tablespoonfuls of light cream. Cook until slightly thickened. Have ready slices of buttered and toasted bread on hot plates, fill the sandwich and cover with the egg and drawn butter or cream sauce. Garnish with sprigs of parsley. Add half a teaspoonful of curry powder to the creamed mixture if desired.

Mock Crab Sandwich.

To one-half cupful of grated cheese add one-fourth cupful of creamed butter, one-half teaspoonful of made mustard, two teaspoonfuls of anchovy paste, a few drops of lemon juice and a tablespoonful of chopped olives. Spread on slices of toasted bread and place in the oven until very hot. Garnish with parsley and narrow strips of canned sweet pimientoes. Serve with celery.

Prune Sandwich, Fried.

Cook prunes after soaking well, pour off the sirup, stone, put through the food chopper and add sugar and cinnamon to taste. Cut the crust off of sandwich bread, slice thin and spread with the mixture and cover with another slice. Dip the sandwiches in a plain pancake batter and fry like french toast or in deep fat. These make a delightful breakfast toast.

Old Style Returns

Hebrew University on Mount Scopus Needs Help

FOR more than ten years the Hebrew university on Mount Scopus, in Palestine, has been struggling for its existence, and now, especially, it needs help. The depression throughout the world has cost the institution much of the support it would receive in normal times. Our illustration shows the Science building of the university and part of the campus, and at the right Dr. Judah L. Magnes, chancellor.

EMERGENCY LUNCHES FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

In many communities throughout the country emergency lunches have been inaugurated for school children who are suffering from lack of food because their families have been affected by the depression. One of the most extensive of these programs, made possible by a million dollar teachers' relief fund, is in operation in New York City. More than 13,600 daily lunches are served free to the children in the elementary and junior high schools, who, upon investigation, are found to be in serious need of food.

The Central Kitchens, operated by the home making department, provide lunches for the needy children in forty-one schools. In the other schools the home making teachers serve from their own kitchens. For these the food and necessary equipment are purchased through the director of the bureau of attendance and paid for by the teachers' relief fund. The home making department furnishes all the menus, recipes, and supervisors, while the workers in the lunch rooms are supplied by the emergency work bureau.

THE PRESIDENT'S FAITH IN THE NATION'S FUTURE

In his message to Congress, President Hoover said:

"Our syistem, based upon the ideals of individual initiatiev and equality of opportunity, is not an artificial thing. Rather it is the outgrowth of the experience of America, and expresses the faith and spirit of our people. It has carried us in a century and a half to leadership of the economic world. If our economic system does not match our highest expectations at all times, it does not require revolutionary action to bring it into accord with any necessity that experience may prove. It has successfully adjusted itself to conditions in the past. It will do so again.

"The mobility of our institutions, the richness of our resources, and the abilities of our people enable us to meet them unafraid.

"It is a distressful time for many of our people, but they have shown qualities as high in fortitude, courage and resourcefulness as ever in our history. With that spirit, I have faith that out of it will come a sounder life, a truer standard of values, a greater recognition of the results of honest effort, and a healthier atmosphere in which to rear our children. Ours must be a country of such stability and security as cannot fail to carry forward and enlarge among all the people that abundant life of material and spiritual opportunity which it has represented among all nations since its beginning."

MANY INTERESTING FACTS IN TELEPHONE ALMANAC

Dad will have to brush up this year on George Washington, in order to answer Junior's questions, for 1932 is the two hundredth year since Washington was born.

But Manager Llye B. Brown, of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, says that Dad will find what he used to know, and many unusual facts besides, in the 1932 Telephone Almanac, which will aid in successfully meeting cross-examinations. Copies of this unique Bell system publication are available, without charge, at the telephone company business office, 444 Bush street, San Francisco.

"Memories of lessons taught in the little red schoolhouse have become a little rusty for most of us," said Mr. Brown. "The scores of facts concerning George Washington contained in the telephone almanac will enable parents to maintain their status as fountain-heads of information.

"The telephone almanac, an annual publication, is unique in its field, and fosters a tradition established by Benjamin Franklin, just two hundred years ago. 'Poor Richard's Almanack' was first published in 1732, the year of Washington's birth. Its homely philosophy had a profund effect on American social and business life, Mr. Brown said.

An astrologer predicted that a United States Senator would lose his mental balance during 1932. Which is our idea of a prophet playing safe.

Chicago man had his wife arrested for pointing a revolver at him. Next time she will probably pull the trigger.

NEW YEAR PLEDGES IN SAFETY LESSON

Saftey themes in the shape of New Year resolutions.

These form the subject of the January poster and lesson distributed to schools by the public safety department of the California State Automobile Association.

Inaugurating the 1932 series of safety instruction materials provided by the motorists' organization, botn the poster and the lesson present an array of safety resolutions for the children:

"I will work for the safety of others as I would want them to work for my safety."

"I will try to be careful, at all times, everywhere."

"I will not take unnecessary chances of getting hurt, and will warn others against doing so."

"I will in no way, by my own acts, do anything which might result in injuries to others."

"All this I will do for the sake of humanity and the good of my community."

YOUTH WILL PARTICIPATE IN COMING STATE FAIR

Hundreds of youths in all parts of California are already making preparations for participation in the 1932 State Fair, September 3 to 10, in the Junior Agricultural and Livestock division. The competition includes exhibits and judging by members of the future farmers of America, high school students, agricultural college students, and 4-H Clubs.

Sam Greene, one of the directors in charge of this department of the State Fair, points out that the bringing together of young farmers from all parts of the state serves as a great stimulus to the agricultural education program in California.

"Rural leadership is one of the greatest needs of the day," he said. "This leadership depends upon a spirit and a morale which the State Fair provides in its recognition of the work of boys and girls in fitting themselves to become successful farmers."

Just as business started to turn the long looked for corner it bumped into a new session of Congress.

SEEK NEW MEASURE FOR RELIEF OF BLIND

Friends of the blind are being requested to support the amendment to the postal laws and regulations which would permit mailing of Braille type books free of charge when sent from publisher to blind persons or libraries circulating such books free of charge to the blind. The amendment was introduced in the present Congress by Congressman Joe Crail at the request of the Braille Institute of America.

At present books in raised characters or Braille type are carried free in the mails when sent from libraries to blind readers. All purchases of such books, however, must be paid for at regular parcel post rates. Because of the necessarily heavy weight of these large Braille-type books, parcel post charges on a single book have amounted in some cases to as much as $20. Thousands of blind readers, unable to afford the purchase of Braille books plus the heavy postage, now are deprived of the solace of reading to pass the time through their hours of darkness.

HITCH HIKER TURNS BANDIT HOLDS UP GOOD SAMARITAN

Acting the good Samaritan proved unprofitable last Tuesday for Oluf Helm, a San Francisco candy salesman. Helm, driving a candy truck on El Camino Real near Tanforan, was stopped by a young man who requested a ride to San Francisco. Taking a seat beside Helm, the man suddenly pressed a gun against Helm's stomach and forced him to drive up Sneath Lane, where the truck was stopped by another bandit, who took the wheel, while the first bandit went through Helm's pockets and took about $300 in cash and checks. The two robbers then forced Helm out of the truck and proceeded toward the Skyline bouleverd, where the truck was later found.

WHY WAIT ON EUROPE?

It is no doubt true that the economic situation in Europe has an important effect on conditions in the United States, but the idea that this country can not get back to something approaching normal prosperity until Europe is rehabilitated seems to us like putting the cart before the horse. It has been generally agreed that only about 10 per cent of our products are ordinarily sold in the world markets. Suppose all of that 10 per cent of foreign trade were cut off. We would still have a demand for 90 per cent of our output—and even 90 per cent prosperity would be very welcome right now.

We have not that 90 per cent demand at present, because we have been worrying so much about Europe that it seems we are afraid to go forward ourselves, as we might do if the element of fear were eliminated.

If every American factory could command the capital to go to work on even a 75 per cent basis immediately, the wages thereby earned by those at present unemployed would greatly add to the nation's buying power, and the stimulating effect of this would extend to every element of our national life.

The new reconstruction finance corporation to be organized with government support may aid in starting business and industry on the up-grade again. But it will also take greater confidence and courage on the part of the people at large to place us on the high road to economic recovery. And it would be just as well, in the meantime, to think more about America and less about Europe.

THE ROAD TO ACCIDENT PREVENTION

At the end of 1931 we look backward on an automobile accident record of 35,000 fatalities and resolve to do better in 1932.

No problem is more within the control of the individual than that of traffic fatalities and injuries. It is within the power of each of us to become a competent, responsible and careful driver. Nine out of ten drivers merit that classification now. It is the one out of ten who causes the accidents—and he is the one who refuses to heed accident prevention messages.

It is a tragic thing that carelessly driven automobiles can cause more deaths than a great war. Tremendous advances have been made in automobile construction, from the standpoint of speed, of power and of mechanical safety. But advances in the standard of driving have lagged behind. We have built better cars—but we have not developed better drivers to operate them.

Highway safety is made up of many little factors—none of which cost anything. If we resolve to abide by the laws, to lose a minute rather than gain one at the risk of our lives and others', to remember the unwritten rules of courtesy and carefulness, there will not be 35,000 automobile deaths annually—and perhaps there will not be even 3,500. Such progress may be too much to hope for in a single year—but every operator of an automobile should remember that is possible and act accordingly.

We are wondering how many soldiers a Chinese general must have to be considered out of the bandit classification.

Our ancient ancestors may have been barbarians, but they didn't expect their victorious foes to set them up in business and pay their war debts.

Natural Gas cuts fuel costs

These homes formerly used gas for cooking and water heating and solid fuel for house heating. Then Natural Gas came. It was used for house heating and down went the total cost of fuel.

Many persons, discovering the cheapness of Natural Gas, heat their homes to a greater extent. In such cases, present fuel bills are about the same as when home-owners used gas for cooking and water heating and solid fuels for house heating.

But no matter how you look at the facts, Natural Gas is the cheapest fuel, to say nothing of its cleanliness and convenience.

MOTODOM ARRAYED AGAINST NEW TAXES

New taxes will not be imposed on automobile owners without a fight.

Battle lines have been drawn to resist any further taxation at this time on a class of property that is already the most heavily taxed in the country.

This is made clear by the action taken by organized motordom as the Congress now in session prepares to deal with a variety of tax proposals. Among those proposals are some that would add to the heavy load of taxes now borne by motor car owners. They include suggestions for a federal sales tax on new automobiles and a federal tax on gasoline.

On behalf of California motorists, the California State Automobile Association has renewed a protest voiced when federal tax suggestions affecting automobile owners were first made several months ago in Washington.

Similar protests have now arisen on a nation-wide scale. Motor clubs in other states have joined the array of opposition. The American Automobile Association, with which the California organization is affiliated, has denounced the proposal as "apparently based on a series of false assumptions as regards the character of motor vehicle property, the tax burden it already bears, its contribution to highway building, and the effect of a federal levy."

D. E. Watkins, secretary and general manager of the California State Automobile Association, in a recent letter to each member of the California delegation in Congress, urged them to prevent additional taxes on car owners. Among the facts he cited the following:

Last year motor vehicle property in the United States paid taxes amounting to more than 18 per cent of its total valuation. At this rate the average car during its life period of seven years pays more than 128 per cent of its average value. From 1921 to 1930, motor car taxes increased 435 per cent, while registration was increasing only 153 per cent.

Building in Eureka totaled $208,618 for the past year, according to figures released by the city building inspector. Sixty-four new dwelling houses were constructed, eighty-four garages and a number of other improvements completed.

Nearly one-half of the employees of the Southern New England Telephone Company, the Bell Company operating in the state of Connecticut, have been in its employ for more than five years.

Five million acres of timber were burned by forest fires in the United States during 1930, the forest service reports.

Premier MacDonald calls upon France and Germany to save Europe. Is Uncle Sam to be slighted like that?

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Reverend Adam Baird, minister of the Methodist Episcopal church in South San Francisco, was the speaker at the regular meeting of the Jefferson Union High School P. T. A. on last Tuesday evening.

"We need better co-operation with teachers in our schools. An appreciation of their efforts, on behalf of our youth, is essential. Few Americans, and certainly only a small percentage of the young people, realize the advantages offered by the schools of this land. Opportunities for securing an education are only limited by the ambition of the seeker after knowledge," said the speaker.

The contrast between the English system of education and that of the United States was finely drawn. Mr. Baird lamented the lack of ethical training in the average school. He urged that teachers try to direct the mind of the student in this direction.

Mr. Baird has a keen sense of humor, and possesses the rare ability of holding the attention of his audience at all times. His career has been an interesting one. Born in England, he came to this country early in life, and has been a close student of American manners. During the war, he was in the service as a chaplain. After the war, he spent some time in the Southern mountains, where he taught in one of the elementary schools.

Two very important rules were made at the faculty meeting of the Jefferson Union high school on last Monday afternoon, and both were passed unanimously. The first pertains to tardiness. Hereafter, any pupil tardy in any recitation during the day will have to spend an extra period after school with the teacher in whose class period he was tardy. The second rule applies to the scholarship requirements for holding student body office. To be eligible as a candidate for any office, students must have passed in every subject with a grade not lower than C during the semester preceeding the term of office; and every student body officer must receive a grade not lower than C in every subject he is carrying. Those receiving a grade lower than C will automatically lose their office. It is believed by the faculty that these rules will stimulate scholarship in the student body.

On Thursday evening Principal James Ferguson was the guest speaker at the Sequoia Club, in San Francisco. His subject was "David Starr Jordan." Mr. Ferguson, while attending Stanford University, became intimately acquainted with President Jordan, at whose home he was frequently a guest. In his address he pictured Dr. Jordan as one of the kindliest of men, a great teacher and the most tremendous force for clean living in the student life of America. "Stanford students everywhere," Mr. Ferguson said, "bow in reverence at the name of David Starr Jordan."

Two new American flags adorn the high school—one in the auditorium and the other in the senior room where the P. T. A. holds its regular meetings.

FROM ALL CORNERS

Because her husband persisted in playing the radio all night in their home in Muskogee, Okla., Marie Fish has filed for divorce.

Gurgling sounds from the inside of a portable sewing machine case belonging to P. J. McNerney of Mobile interested detectives who opened it to find seven pints of liqur.

A voluntary reduction of his salary from $1,200 to $900 a year was made by the Rev. F. A. Shawky of Alda, Neb., because of the financial strain on his church members.

A cat belonging to F. L. Bradley of Weston, Tex., mothered two of her own kittens, three squirrels and a rabbit.

Joeseph Zargette of Calais, France, was arrested for throwing his wife out of the window because she went to a dance.

A widower has written to A. E. Scott, warden of the jail in Wakefield, Eng., to pick out from the women prisoners one who would be willing to marry.

Mrs. Gladys Moore of St Louis testified in her divorce suit that her husband smashed all her china and every window and also broke her nose.

Mrs. Susan P. Garrick of Jersey City testified in her divorce suit that her husband gave her only 25 cents a day to live on and asked for an account of it each night.

When police asked Edward Ely and Jack Mergen of Omaha, Neb., why they had driven backwards for a distance of four miles, they replied, "We rented the car and thought by driving backwards we could cut down the mileage."

ANTLERED DOE DISCOVERED ON MOUNT HAMILTON SLOPE

When Dame Nature decides to put antler on a doe, she evidently transmits all the pugnacious traits of character that are commonly associated with the buck, according to field men of the Division of Fish and Game.

Several months ago the Division successfully captured an antlered doe on the slopes of Mount Hamilton, and prepared to study the animal with a view of acquiring some direct knowledge of such zoological freaks.

After a brief "civilizing" period she was placed in a pen with a male of the same species. They fought—and how! In fact, the animosity became so keen that it was necessary to separate the mammals before they were literally torn to ribbons.

She will be watched to see if she sheds her antlers as is the habit with the male of the species. This antler shedding should occur in February or March. Next season there will be another test to see if she has changed her opinion about the men in the family.

To the human race she is gentle and friendly, but just let the buck get too close and she has fire in her eyes, Division field men declare.

CARE AT CROSSINGS RULE FOR MOTORIST

The Public Safety Department of the California State Automobile Association makes this appeal to all motorists in a statement commenting on the January campaign of the California Committee on Public Safety.

Cars entering a highway or through street from a side road are required by law to yield the right of way to cars on the main route which have already entered the intersection or are immediately approaching it. But having done so, they are entitled to then proceed and cars on the major artery must grant them the right of way.

"Watch Byways Always" is the slogan being used in connetcion with the month's safety campaign.

SIDELIGHTS

One of the nerviest take-offs in the history of aviation was made by William Jewett, "flying geologist," and Jewett Fox, his mechanic, whose plane was forced down on a Canadian lake a few days ago. After making repairs it was found that they had not power enough to rise from the lake, so they deliberately taxied over a 400-foot waterfall and thereby gained sufficient momentum to carry them toward their destination without mishap.

Mayor Overton, of Memphis, rightly suspected that some of his friends might want to send him some token on his inauguration for a second term, so he asked any such to send a dollar bill for the unemployed. W. W. Fischer sent a single white gardenia, but enclosed it in a wrapper made of ten $1 dollar bills.

Dick Raycraft, of Tonopah, Nev., believes in smoking, not only as a source of comfort, but also as a harbinger of good luck. Six years ago he lit his pipe and threw the burning match into a hole in the ground. The flame revealed a shining interior which investigation showed to be lined with gold particles. From that pocket Raycraft has since taken about $50,000 worth of gold ore.

Discriminating is the New York musicians' union, which ought to know a musical instrument when it sees or hears one. When May Singhi Breen applied for a union card as a ukelele player, it was refused on the ground that the ukelele is not a musical instrument. Most folks will approve the union's ruling.

An interesting branch of vocational training has been established at the Dalton School for young women in Manhattan. It is a practical course in which each class will have the care of a real live baby for two years. It may be fine experience for the Dalton girls, but how about the babies?

Electric lamps which emit ultra-violet rays are being used to pep up tigers, leopards and other tropical animals in the zoos of San Francisco and Pittsburgh, according to a Westinghouse bulletin. In one case it is said that the life of a rare leopard was saved by the light treatment, while other animals which were sickly developed good appetites and showed great improvement in health after exposure to the beneficial rays of "artificial sunlight."

On Friday evening, January 8, Mrs. Roberta Allen entertained members of La Fiesta Club at her beautiful new home on Fourteenth avenue. After the regular business meeting, conducted by Mrs. Allen, president, and Miss Marge O'Connor, secretary, a dainty supper was served to the guests. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Past President, Roberta Allen; President, Annette Drury; Vice-president, Collista Dalton; Secretary, Marge O'Connor; Treasurer, Elsie Fahy; Publicity Committee, Loraine Wall and Sylvia Fischer; Social Committee, Louise Clemens. The following members had a most enjoyable evening: Audrey Diamond, Tess O'Connor, Christine Hume, Lorraine Wall, Sylvia Fischer, Annette Drury, Collista Dalton, Edna Boyle, Elsie Fahy, Marge O'Connor and Roberta Allen.

On Tuesday evening, January 15, about thirty friends of Miss Elsie Fahy surprised her at her home, the occasion being her birthday. During the evening Richard Fahy, Jr., and Miss Margaret Fahy, of San Francisco, dressed as a bride and groom, presented each guest with a novel program, announcing the engagement of Miss Elsie Fahy to Mr. Roy Thompson, of San Francisco. The dining room was artistically decorated for the occasion, the color scheme being pink and white. In the center of the table were two huge pink and white hearts, while from the chandeliers and doorway hung huge pink bells with streamers. Later in the evening Mr. Roy Thomson, the groom to be, and several friends joined the party. Best wishes were extended to the happy couple. Among the guests were Misses Marge O'Connor, Tess O'Connor, and Audrey Diamond; Mesdames Roberta Allen and Lorraine Wall.

Mrs. J. E. Walker, of Frankfort street, was the dinner guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. Hansen, of Palo Alto, last Monday.

The King of Siam has recognized several worthy persons by conferring upon them the grand cross of the Order of the White Elephant. The same honor might appropriately be bestowed on Muscle Shoals.

PRECEDING EVENTS

Joe Barry, country youth in New York, ekes out a living as caretaker in a poor rooming house and accordion player in Louie Bertolini's restaurant. Lured by the open country, he spends a night in the fields, neglecting his duties. Next day Bertolini discharges him. A frequent visitor to Bertolini's offers him $10,000 to impersonate a "bootlegger" in trouble. It means a penitentiary sentence for Joe, and he hesitates. The man, "Martin," gives him $1,000 "on account." Next day Joe deposits $800 in country banks, giving his name as Joseph Bradley. A circus attracts him. Outside a tent he sees an accordion and is tempted to play it. A girl, Sue Dayton, niece of the owner, who admires the music, urges him to take a position with the circus. Joe says he must first return to New York "on business." He has decided to refuse "Martin's" offer. In his room four men accost him.

CHAPTER III

Instantly hands began to paw about Joe Barry, pushing his arms awkwardly half upward as they rubbed hard beneath his armpits, as swiftly to go downward, to his coat pockets, his belt, even to the knees of his trousers. All the while the other two men merely stood there, hands in coat pockets, their eyes set on his eyes, like a boxer watching an antagonist for the telegraph of a coming blow. Then the voice came again:

"Well, kid, all flossed out in a new fiddle and flute!"

The direct address seemed to jerk Joe Barry from his numbness. For the first time he truly saw the men before him, clean-shaven, well-dressed persons, like business men. One held Joe's attention; he was a tall, almost genial-appearing person of about fifty. There was a hint of the Irish in his blue eyes, sharp, penetrating, somehow kind, yet impersonal. Joe did not define the words in his mind—everything was too blurred. He looked about him wildly.

"I don't see what you're doing all this for. I'm not guilty of anything." He twisted in his excitement. A detective jerked him back to immovability.

"Don't throw a fit about it."

"But you're going to accuse me of things I didn't do. I was going down and explain everything—"

"Oh, there's something to explain? Well, we'll ride you down and save you the walk. That's service, isn't it?" Then over Joe's shoulder. "How about it?"

"Feels clean," said a detective from behind. A hand rammed into Joe's right trousers pocket, then poked itself forward under his arm, displaying a wadded fistful of currency. "Lousy with the soft. Better cuff him?"

"Yeh." The voice seemed to have something of authority. "Give him a pair of 'em. Jake, you and Jerry take a ring apiece."

Joe began to protest again; then his voice ceased with the dumb wonderment of why they should jerk his arms down like that, and why a man on each side should clamp a cold, yet burning handcuff on him, each fastening the other bracelet to his own wrist. Again he began:

"Please, I haven't done anything—"

The leader moved past him without answer.

"Fan the joint, Ed," he commanded.

Joe Barry shook his head desperately. His eyes had taken on the dull finish of a tired animal now.

"I haven't got anything in here."

A drawer scratched open. There was a rustling of paper, and a slight sound of tearing. Then Ed's voice:

"Pete—hey, Maxwell!"

Pete Maxwell turned from a survey of the washstand drawer.

"Yeah?" he asked and going beside the other man, knelt for a moment. The detective at Joe's right grunted.

"Something hot?" he queried of the two men at the bureau. Pete raised.

"Yeh," he answered. "A Tomcat and two heaters."

Joe looked over his shoulder; he had not understood the slang; he only knew that he saw three packages wrapped in brown paper which had not been there when he had left that morning.

"That stuff's not mine!" he snapped. Pete paid no attention. Joe turned first to the right and left, desperately. "I don't know anything about those packages. I never saw them before. I don't know what they are, but they're not mine. They're not mine!" he cried.

Ed shrugged his shoulders.

"Then why get so excited? Maybe they're marshmallows — or cream puffs."

Joe twisted against the hot clasp of wrist-steel.

"I don't care what they are. They've been put in here to get me in trouble." A word came to his lips, one he had been searching for. "All this has been framed up. I've been framed—framed."

"Oh G—d!" said Jerry in a tired voice. "Pull something new."

Swiftly the two men at the bureau went through the other drawers, apparently finding nothing. Then Pete rose and jerked loose the string which held Joe's bundle of old clothing.

"Getting all set to make a lam, eh sport?" he asked. "Good trick—just carrying a bundle instead of a suitcase. What you got, Ed?" he asked of his partner, who was on his knees and fishing under the bed.

"Shoes with country mud on 'em."

"Bring 'em along." Then he noticed the gray, creased clothing which Joe had discarded on the return from his first trip to the country. "Rained on," he said, screwing up his genial features. "Yeh, that's right. Night before last."

It all meant nothing to Joe, quivering in his bonds. But suddenly it meant a great deal.

"I can prove where I was night before last," he said.

"Fine," answered Pete. "That makes it easier." He was going through the old suit now, at last to claw deep into a pocket and grasp something there. His hand came out with some difficulty; currency seemed to bound from his grasp as he placed his find on the bureau. "More soft!" he exclaimed. Suddenly he bent and examined the money and pulled a memorandum book from a vest pocket. Joe launched into new denials.

"I never saw that money before. I don't know where it came from."

"No?" Ed asked it lackadaisically, and picking up another bill, mumbled

"That's Not My Money. I Don't Know Where It Came From."

the numbers to Pete. Again Joe asserted hopelessly:

"That's not my money. I don't know where it came from."

"Maybe we can help you find out," said Pete quietly and continued his search of the notebook. In a few moments his work seemed completed. "Give him the bell," he commanded of the two men at the door. "Ed and I'll stay here and give the place another runover. Tell the Royal Mopper we'll be down in about twenty minutes."

Joe Barry whirled, bold with desperation.

"Why don't you talk English!" he burst forth. "Four of you, coming up here and trussing me like I was some sort of wild animal! Four of you, why didn't you put guns on me or beat me up! Yelling this gibberish at each other so I won't know what you're saying—"

"Then, Spirit of Innocence," answered Pete Maxwell with an impersonal grin, "honest to G—d, we're policemen. And we're going to take you to the East Twenty-second Street station house where the captain, or Royal Mopper, will hold conversation with you after we get there. Is that plain enough or shall I write a book about it?"

Lord Mayor's Banquets

Mr. T. Lewis Sayer's book, "Gog, Magog and I," on the city of London, touches on the famous eating and drinking of the city; quotes Mr. Bottomley Firth's gibe—"It could be written on the back of many a common councilman, 'Widened at the expense of the city corporation'"; and gives a long list of the banquets in the preparation of which he had a share. One story shows their perils other than that of over-eating. At a luncheon to a prince from Asia the company were actually taking their seats when a trophy of lobster and ice, set right before the royal guest, was hurriedly removed, as the result of a last minute discovery that to him the lobster, being the scavenger of the sea, was an unclean, forbidden food. — London Times.

Little Harold and his sister Adrienne, whose ages are six and three respectively, were telling their mother about Sunday school.

"Mother," said Harold, "this morning Mrs. Brown said that sister and me were the prettiest children at Sunday school."

"That's fine, but don't let it turn your head. Remember, 'pretty is as pretty does.'"

"Well," replied Harold, "I am 'is,' and Adrienne is 'does.'"

La Salle, Magnificent Adventurer

Map of La Salle's Explorations

La Salle at the Mouth of the Mississippi

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE time is February in the year 1682; the place is the Illinois river in what is now the state of that name; the actors in the epic drama which is now about to begin are some 18 Indians and 23 French soldiers and voyageurs. Not a very impressive company, it is true, but the leader of it is what makes it great. For this leader is Rene-Robert Cavelier, Sieur de La Salle, "magnificent adventurer" and one of the world's greatest explorers.

"La Salle . . . announced that they would take to their canoes. They lifted the light white birch-barks from the sledges, and slipped them into the icy water. The baggage and rifles went aboard, piece by piece, then man after man, soldier, and voyageur, and red hunter stepped gingerly to his place, sank to a kneeling position, and took up his long-handled paddle. First one light canoe, then another, pushed off from shore and the black current bore them away.

"To right and left they saw drab banks frost-flecked and hard that rang under a blow, and leafless forests iron in their rigid desolation that rose despairingly toward an opaque gray sky. On the sixth of February, they emerged from the Illinois, and their fleet slipped out upon the swelling current of the Mississippi. La Salle's dreams came nearer. The mirage at last promised realization."

Thus began the historic voyage down the length of the "Father of Waters" which was to give to France control of the interior of North America, which was to open up the vista of the richness of a new empire before the greedy eyes of the white race, which was to enbroil England and France in an almost unending war for the next three-quarters of a century and which was to result finally in the founding of a new nation greater than either. It is this voyage which has been characterized as "one of the greatest epics of all history."

To most Americans the name of La Salle is just another in a dimly-remembered list from their school-book histories. But now, 250 years after the beginning and the end of his great achievement, his name is brought to their attention again through the publication of two biographies of him. One of them is "La Salle," written by L. V. Jacks and published by Charles Scribner's Sons (from which the foregoing quotation is taken) and the other is "The French Adventurer—The Life and Exploits of La Salle," written by M. Maurice Constantin-Weyer and published by the Macaulay company. Mr. Jacks is an American and M. Constantin-Weyer is a Frenchman. So it is interesting to read their two books together and get the two points of view on this great Frenchman whose name is written high in the annals of America.

Of the voyage down the river, Mr. Constantin-Weyer writes a vivid account—how "spring was breaking on every side. A sky of clouds rent by the wind was reflected in blue and white. The forest was powdered with tender green. Flowers were unfolding timid petals. The cries of migratory birds filled the immense valley. Mosquitoes swarmed. At night coyotes barked on the hillsides. In the mornings bison descended in friendly pairs to the giant drinking trough."

They passed the mouths of great rivers—the muddy Missouri, the quiet Ohio, ("La Belle Riviere") and the Arkansas. There were adventures with Indians, both pleasant and grim, for they met both friendly and hostile red men. There were innumerable new wonders of scenery which unfolded before their eyes and a variety of experiences such as few explorers had ever had. Just two months from the time they had floated out upon the broad bosom of the Mississippi, "all at once spray struck their faces. Tasting the water they found it already brackish. A great joy painfully welled up in their breasts; a thrill ran down their spines. And suddenly, sonorous under the shock of a thousand waves, immense and without a sail, there was the sea! April the seventh, 1682!"

Thus M. Constantin-Weyer. And now to turn to Mr. Jacks for the next scene:

"The Frenchmen must have been as glad to see the Gulf as Xenophon's hardy soldiers once were glad to see the blue of the Euxine. When at last, red as a great fire-tinged ruby, the sun had dropped to rest in the melancholy marshes and savannas to westward, and the night wind brought over the glitter of the phosphorescent sea the faint hushed voices of breathing waters, the voyagers lay down beside their canoes, aware that they had seen, in all probability, the greatest day of their tumultuous lives.

It had been a long trail which he had followed since that far-off day when as a schoolboy in Rouen, France, he had read of other explorers and adventurers and had thrilled to the tales of their exploits in the places which had previously been marked on the rude maps of the time "terra incognita." In those 39 years his life had been one of many hardships, of many high hopes, of many disappointments. But in his make-up was the tough fiber of soul which had carried him through all of this, the fiber that justified the title given him by an early American biographer—"The Undespairing Norman."

Count Frontenac

Educated for priesthood in the Jesuit order, La Salle soon found that the restlessness in his blood would never allow him to be happy in that role. The result was a journey in his early twenties to Canada where his brother was a prist in the Seminary of St. Sulpice. Through the influence of this brother, he received a grant of land near Montreal, a seigneury which he named La Chine. The name was significant—already he was dreaming of finding the undiscovered northwest passage to China, the goal of many an explorer before him.

So when the Indians told him of a great southwestern river which flowed into the "Vermillion sea" his quick mind grasped this as the route of the long-sought passage to the Orient, and he determined to follow the river. So he sold his seigneury to obtain funds for an expedition and in July, 1669, the first of his long wanderings through the interior of the North American continent began. That trip carried him up the St. Lawrence, along the south shore of Lake Ontario, among the villages of the Iroquois, on to Niagara, along the south shore of Lake Erie and then south through what is now the state of Ohio until he, in all probability, reached the Ohio river. But desertions among his followers forced La Salle to go back to Canada so his first expedition was something of a failure.

His resources were now exhausted but he found an unexpected friend in Count Frontenac, "the Iron Governor" of Canada, who gave him the exclusive trading privileges at Fort Frontenac (the modern Kingston) on the condition that he would rebuild the defenses and garrison the post. In the meantime Father Marquette and Louis Joliet had reached the Mississippi, "the Great Southwest river" and gone down it for a considerable distance, although they did not follow it to its mouth. So that honor still awaited La Salle.

However, he needed more capital, so in 1677 he made a trip to France with letters from Frontenac to the king and his ministers. In Paris La Salle found attentive listeners to his plans and when he returned to Canada in 1678 he brought with him a royal decree authorizing him to make discoveries and build forts in the interior of North America. He also brought back with him the man who was destined to be his chief lieutenant and greatest friend—Henri de Tonti, an Italian, "the Man with the Iron Hand."

That winter La Salle and Tonti were busy completing a fort at Niagara and building a ship. Before spring had come a vessel of about 45 tons, the largest yet built for service on the Great Lakes, was completed. On its prow was a carved griffon from the armorial bearings of La Salle's patron, Count Frontenac, and this ship won enduring fame under the name of the Griffin. (Incidentally, it was more "enduring" than La Salle could possibly have realized, for within the last year the timbers from a wrecked ship were found in Lake Huron and there is strong evidence to support the belief that these timbers were once a part of the Griffin—found after more than 250 years!)

La Salle sailed his vessel to Michilimackinac where he acquired a rich store of furs, then sailed on into Lake Michigan and finally dropped anchor in Green Bay where some more furs were obtained. Sending the Griffin back to Montreal, La Salle started south along the Wisconsin shore and reaching the mouth of the St. Joseph, he built Fort Miami. Then he struck across country to the upper Kankakee. From there he made his way down the Illinois to the present site of Peoria, Ill, where he built Fort Crevecoeur.

Leaving Tonti in charge, La Salle started back to Canada. When he reached Niagara at Easter time in 1680 it was to find news of disaster. The Griffin with all of her rich cargo of furs had been lost. La Salle hurried on to Montreal and once more sought the aid of Frontenac. Again he was provided with the necessary equipment for carrying out his projects and within a few months he was again at Fort Frontenac and ready to join Tonti at Crevecoeur. Just as he was ready to leave, however, there came the news that the garrison at the fort on the Illinois had mutinied and destroyed the post.

La Salle's one hope now was that the faithful Tonti had held on and had saved something from the wreckage of his plans. But when he reached Crevecoeur, he found Tonti gone to Green Bay and the place deserted. Undaunted by this climax to his misfortunes, the "Undespairing Norman" pushed on down the Illinois until he reached the Mississippi. But his party was too small to attempt an expedition down this great river. So La Salle once more retraced his weary steps northward. He spent the winter at Fort Miami, and in the spring he learned that Tonti was at Michilimackinac and there he hastened to hear from his trusted lieutenant the long tale of disaster. Of this interview an eye-witness writes: "Anyone else would have thrown up his hands and abandoned the enterprise; but far from this, with a firmness and constancy that never had its equal, I saw him more resolved than ever to continue his work and push forward his discovery."

La Salle was now determined to continue with his plan for exploring the Mississippi. Returning once more to Fort Frontenac he replenished his supplies and in the autumn of 1681 he set out once more, with Tonti, for the Illinois country. Then followed his journey down the Illinois river to the Mississippi and the beginning of the great journey which took place just 250 years ago.
